COVER:

Evening Concert Series

Outstanding musical performers from Yugoslavia, Australia, and several part of Canada will appear in this season's series of evening concerts at the University of Victoria.

Professor Peter Garvie, Director of the School of Fine Arts, said today that the series will consist of ten concerts.

Series tickets, available at the SUB and Fine Arts office in the Education and Arts Building, sell at a student rate of $5, and $10 for other patrons. Individual admissions will be 75 cents for students, and $1.50 for others.

All concerts are at 8 p.m. in the Education and Arts lecture theatre (E-A 144).

Tessa Birnie, a specialist in the keyboard music of Mozart and Schubert, opened the series with three lecture-recitals on Schubert's works for piano.

On November 14, Canada's leading ensemble for the performance of mediaeval and renaissance music, the Manitoba Consort, will pay its first visit to British Columbia. The group, which played at Britain's Aldeburgh Festival last year, also has several engagements in California.

The contemporary scene will be represented in late November, with the visit of Vancouver composers Robert Turner and Barbara Pentland. They will present an evening of their own works.

The Zagreb Quartet from Yugoslavia will be in Victoria February 5, to present a program of classical and contemporary works.

Other programs in the series will feature faculty members John Avison and Hugh McLean, Marion Barnum, and other performers of works for the harpsichord and for one and two pianos.

The Manitoba Consort and the evening of Canadian composers are sponsored by the University's centennial committee.
